

In 2004, on a sunny Sunday morning death came calling in many nations surrounding the Indian Ocean. There was an earthquake, thousands of feet under the sea – a quake that no one felt, but a quake whose results would be felt, whose results would shake the entire world of mankind. This unfelt earthquake caused waves – big waves, whose fury and power knew no bounds and whose ferocity destroyed all in their path, even if that path met land 4000 miles away. We know the death toll to be somewhere over 150,000 and we know the lasting effects will continue. We know the damage to be incomprehensible and we know that life in the wake of these tsunamis’, hangs by a thread. Where was God in all of this? Was this his wrath? Was he even paying attention? Could he have stopped the death and destruction? Stay with us as we discuss these hard questions in the context of such a terrible tragedy... Are natural disasters “Acts of God”?
